THE CONTROVERSY OVER THE KANSAS–NEBRASKA ACT, 1854–58

1 Read the sources, and then answer the question.

Source A

To all Americans. Do not submit to become agents in extending legalized oppression and systematized injustice over a vast territory still exempt from the terrible evil of slavery.

Whatever apologies may be offered for the toleration of slavery in the States, none can be offered for its extension into Territories where it does not exist, and where that extension involves the repeal of ancient law and the violation of solemn agreements. All should protest, earnestly and emphatically, by correspondence, through the press, by memorials, by resolutions of public meetings and legislative bodies, and in whatever other mode may seem expedient, against this enormous crime.

For ourselves, we shall resist it by speech and vote, and with all the abilities which God has given us. Even if overcome in the impending struggle, we shall not submit. We shall go home to our constituents, erect anew the standard of freedom, and call on the people to come to the rescue of the country from the domination of slavery. We will not despair; for the cause of human freedom is the cause of God.

Appeal of the Independent Democrats, 19 January 1854.

Source B

The Missouri Compromise of 1820 is hereby declared inoperative and void. It is the true intent and meaning of this Act not to legislate slavery into any Territory or State, nor to exclude it therefrom, but to leave the people thereof perfectly free to form and regulate their domestic institutions in their own way, subject only to the Constitution of the United States.

Kansas–Nebraska Act, 30 May 1854.

Source C

What a happy conception it was for Congress to apply this simple rule, that the will of the majority shall govern, to the settlement of the question of domestic slavery in the Territories. Congress is neither to 'legislate slavery into any Territory nor to exclude it, but to leave the people thereof perfectly free to form and regulate their domestic institutions in their own way subject only to the US Constitution.' Hence Congress prescribed that when Kansas be admitted as a State it shall be received into the Union with or without slavery, as its constitution shall prescribe at the time of admission.

The whole question being settled upon the principle of popular sovereignty, may we not then hope that the long agitation on this subject will end and that the sectional parties to which it has given birth will all speedily become extinct?

President Buchanan's Inaugural Address, 4 March 1857.

Source D

I hold to be a fundamental principle in all free governments that every people ought to have the right to form, adopt and ratify the constitution under which they are to live. If the people of Kansas want a slaveholding state, let them have it and if they want a free state they have a right to it and it is not for the people of New York or Missouri to complain about their decision.

If the people of a Territory want slavery, they will encourage it by passing the necessary laws and police regulations. If they do not want it they will withhold that legislation and slavery will be as dead as if was prohibited by the Constitution.

Source E

Douglas's motives in introducing a bill which opened to slavery a region from which it had been excluded by the Missouri Compromise have been much debated. In his mind the concession to the South was nominal, as he was convinced that slavery would only exist where it paid, and the soil and climate of Kansas and Nebraska were unsuited to the cultivation of plantation crops. He also genuinely believed that popular sovereignty was both the most democratic and effective way of dealing with the position of slavery in territories. Once the people of each territory were allowed to decide the matter for themselves by majority vote, the slavery question would cease to agitate the nation. Douglas's practical grasp of the problem of slavery extension was sound enough but he erred in failing to comprehend that for a growing number of Northerners slavery was not a practical problem but a moral one. His insensibility to that fact proved fatal to his presidential hopes, the unity of his party and the Union.

From an historian's account of Douglas's 'popular sovereignty' solution to the slavery issue, 1997.

Now answer the following question.

'When Douglas put forward the principle of popular sovereignty he made a disastrous error.' Using Sources A-E discuss how far the evidence supports this assertion.
